LEGISLATORS FOR THE TIME

How Newspaper Men, With the Connivance of the Speaker, Secured
Adjournment of House.

The speaker in almost any legislative body in America has a good deal of power, especially if an active and vigorous portion of the members is with him. A writer in the Cleveland Leader tells how a strong combination was on one occasion effected in the Ohio legislature. On a certain Thursday afternoon a circus came to town and complimentary tickets were scattered broadcast. The newspaper reporters were not overlooked, and after five or six months of tedious work they were naturally rejoiced at a chance to get an afternoon off.

The speaker, too, wanted to see the circus, and along about half past one, when the discussion over a certain bill was at its height, some one looked at his watch and said, "Move we adjourn."

"Moved and seconded we adjourn!" shouted the speaker. "All in favor say aye."

All the reporters and some of the members shouted "Aye!" Fifty of the members cried "No!"

"The house stands adjourned!" said the speaker, bringing down his gavel, and he and the light-hearted legislators marched off to the big tents.

AS TO THE PRIMA DONNA

Polly—Rather uncertain in her notes, I think.

Dolly—Why, yes. She strikes some and approximates others.

AMERICA'S COTTON RIVAL.

A striking speech was made by Sir William Willcocks, the other day at Cairo, on the subject of "A Ten Million Cantar Cotton Crop." Sir William expressed the belief that with rational irrigation and proper cultivation the cotton production would be not four, but six or seven, cantars to the acre. He suggested the division of the Nile delta into blocks of 10,000 acres, each having its pumping station for securing its proper drainage. By such means, he said, it would be possible to bring the total cultivated area of lower Egypt up to 1,600,000 acres. In the years 1907-8 Egypt produced nearly seven and a quarter cantars of cotton; but in 1909-10 the total production was only a little over 5,000,000 cantars.

CALIFORNIA GIRLS AS ATHLETES.

To promote all kinds of athletics among the women of the University of Southern California a "sports and pastime club" has been organized.

It has been felt for some time that the lack of intercollegiate athletics among the women students of the university has had a tendency to have them neglect their physical welfare. The gymnasium classes in a measure substituted, but a large percentage of the girls did not take agreeably to the indoor routine. The newly organized club seems destined to popularity from the start.

SHOULD CURE ANYTHING.

Dr. Lambert Ott of Philadelphia has discovered a cure for rheumatism—acetylmethenedisalicilic acid. Whether acetylmethenedisalicilic acid is better than acetylmethenedisalicilic acid we are unable to say. The linotype inclines to acetylmethenedisalicilic, while the proofreader—bless his heart—is an acetylmethenedisalicilic fan. But enough of acetylmethenedisalicilic and acetylmethenedisalicilic acids.—New York Mail.
